Following a 3 11 campaign in 1961, the Broncos replaced Filchock with Jack Faulkner, who ritualistically burned the Broncos vertically striped socks prior to the new season.[12] Faulkner led them to a 7 7 record in 1962, their best record in the AFL. This. 500 season was not, however, a prelude to success, as the Broncos would lose at least 10 games each of the next five years, during which they were led by four different coaches and over half a dozen starting quarterbacks.[6]Mac Speedie replaced Faulkner five games into the 1964 season, breaking an eleven game losing streak by beating Kansas City 37 33. However, the Broncos would only win one more game in 1964, ending the season with a 2 11 1 record.[13] The team improved only marginally in 1965, finishing with a 4 10 record.[14] In the first game of the 1966 season, a 45 7 loss to Houston, the Broncos failed to record a first down[15] and finished with only 26 yards of total offense, including 7 yards passing.[16] After the 2nd game, Speedie resigned and was replaced by interim head coach Ray Malavasi, under whom the Broncos finished the season 4 10.[17].

2017 impact: Jay Ajayi turned into a franchise back once the Dolphins gave him the starting job, as the second year man averaged 4.9 yards per carry, which was good for eighth in the league. Those numbers are buoyed by several big plays: Ajayi was the only back in football with four carries of 40 yards or more. Ajayi's success rate on runs was just 43 percent, which was 32nd among 42 qualifying backs.
