I still am not sold on how well the logistics of putting an NBA team (or more than one team) in Europe would work. With so many games played in such a condensed schedule it just seems problematic as far as travel time. While I agree that the NBA probably has by far the largest following overseas of all the major American professional sports leagues, it just seems like putting a team there would be extremely challenging with the NBA schedule being what it is.

This will help prevent Reebok from having too many jerseys of a player it does not need. Postponement also means that Reebok is aggregating the jerseys and such aggregated forecast are more accurate. This involves standardizing as much of the process as possible for different products, and then customizing the products as late as possible.

With a lineup anchored by young stars Mookie Betts, Xander Bogaerts and Jackie Bradley Jr. And a rotation headed by Sale, David Price and 2016 Cy Young Award winner Rick Porcello, the Red Sox are poised to stay competitive in 2017 and beyond. Plus, they'll get to watch Sale do things like this:
