Harvard quickly took a liking to the rugby game, and its use of the try which, until that time, was not used in American football. The try would later evolve into the score known as the touchdown. On June 4, 1875, Harvard faced Tufts University in the first game between two American colleges played under rules similar to the McGill/Harvard contest, which was won by Tufts.[17] The rules included each side fielding 11 men at any given time, the ball was advanced by kicking or carrying it, and tackles of the ball carrier stopped play.[18] Further elated by the excitement of McGill's version of football, Harvard challenged its closest rival, Yale, to which the Bulldogs accepted.

Colabello, 33, appeared in only 10 games last season before being suspended 80 games for violating Major League Baseball's Joint Drug Prevention and Treatment Program. Colabello's suspension came down in April after he tested positive for dehydrochlormethyltestosterone, which is an anabolic steroid. Once Colabello was eligible to play again, he remained in the Minor Leagues for 45 games..

Louis Cardinals at 9 3 2.[6] The Browns were led by their head coach Blanton Collier, quarterback Frank Ryan, running back Jim Brown, and receivers Gary Collins and Paul Warfield. This was the Browns' eighth NFL championship game appearance since joining the NFL in 1950, and the first since 1957. Ticket prices for the championship game were six, eight, and ten dollars, [7] and the Colts were seven point favorites on the road. [8][9] The first half went scoreless, as both teams struggled to move the ball with a light snow and driving wind hampering their efforts. Baltimore drove to midfield but lost the ball on a fumble by fullback Jerry Hill.
