"We just weren't ready for it, but we have another game on Friday and we have to get ready for that one." That start was a stomach punch that the Thunder battled back from in the second quarter, cutting a 25 point Spurs lead to just 14 thanks to an 11 0 run, giving the Thunder a chance to get within striking distance. The burst started with a pair of Anthony Morrow free throws, then Andre Roberson tipped in an Enes Kanter miss. On the ensuing defensive possession, Russell Westbrook made a steal that led to a Morrow runner and 3 point play. Morrow then made a steal that led to a Westbrook fast break dunk and out of a timeout, Westbrook made his team's third straight swipe, leading to a Dion Waiters slam dunk. That run had the arena in a frenzy, but it was quieted before halftime by one more Spurs burst.

However, you only allowed five players as eligible receivers. Shane Vereen had to declare himself as ineligible, then line up in an ineligible spot. In contrast the Ravens sent out five linemen and five eligible receivers. One way to think about the uncertainty principle is as an extension of how we see and measure things in the everyday world. You can read these words because particles of light, photons, have bounced off the screen or paper and reached your eyes. Each photon on that path carries with it some information about the surface it has bounced from, at the speed of light.
