In the Super Bowl, Taylor recorded a team high seven tackles and also had two passes defensed and a crucial interception at the Steelers five yard line which helped the Steelers to secure a 21 10 victory custom jersey over the Seattle Seahawks.[5]Taylor was rewarded for his performance prior to the 2006 season with a contract extension valued at $22.5 million over four years (with $6.4 million guaranteed). The contract made Taylor the highest paid cornerback in franchise history and would tie him to the Steelers through 2010.[9]Taylor's play regressed in 2006 and he was stripped of his starting role after game 10; he was not re inserted into the starting lineup until the final game of the season, and then only due to an injury to Deshea Townsend.[10] He re committed himself in the off season and regained his spot at left cornerback for 2007 under the new regime of head coach Mike Tomlin, who replaced Bill Cowher.[11] In a first round loss to the Jacksonville Jaguars in the 2007 Taylor recorded his third consecutive post season game with an interception, which set a team record.[12]Taylor won the NFL's Defensive Player of the Week award for his performance against the Seahawks in the fifth week of 2007. In the game, he had six solo tackles, three passes defensed and a goal line interception to halt a Seahawks drive at the end of the first half.
