I just wonder if the NFL understands how ridiculous this whole thing has become. They talk about the shield with these suspensions, but the amount of time and effort they expend to suspend a player who has never been convicted of a crime is incredible. If the criminal justice system didn believe there was significant evidence to convict him, and there has not been anything leaked by TMZ or others to refute that, then why even bother? Why is it not good enough to have a standard that indicates that for any issues involving criminal acts, that suspensions will be issued out upon convictions.

Malcolm Jenkins, Eagles safety: "I think it sends a message to players, to the fan base, to anybody watching that these demonstrations and the players that have been standing up for their communities aren't looked at in a bad way, the way we've been depicted over the last year isn't true, and that our teammates don't feel that way, our coaches don't feel that way and the ownerships of these teams don't feel that way. I think it's time that those people stand up and not stand up and take on this fight, but at least show support and change the narrative that's been encircling these demonstrations and the reasons. We've been so caught up over the hoodies last year over what's right and what's wrong and spent very little time actually talking about the issues." Jenkins stood with his fist in the air.

You also have the 2nd tier in the Netherlands and Portugal, the 3rd in Germany etc that could be added.
