EA is headquartered in the Redwood Shores neighborhood of Redwood City, California.[23] Following the retirement and departure of Trip Hawkins in 2000, EA replaced their long running Shapes logo with one based on the EA Sports logo used at the time, and Larry Probst took over the reins. EA also started to use a brand specific structure around this time, with the main publishing side of the company re branding to EA Games. The EA Sports brand was retained for major sports titles, the new EA Sports Big label would be used for casual sports titles with an arcade twist, and the full Electronic Arts name would be used for copublished and distributed titles..
