He ended up in Canada with an independent command to test the concept of the new unit in the expected campaign from Canada down to New York City in the summer of 1777. He found himself a pawn in an environment where the senior English leadership was engaged in internecine bureaucratic fighting over responsibilities, prerogatives and recognition while the English rank and file considered their Tories allies as unreliable and unappreciative, their German allies as incompetent, their Indian allies as children and the Whigs rebels as cowards. The senior leadership didn't know what the Jeagers were or how they should be used.

It's easy to get caught up in the comparison game so early in Simmons's career. There are the obvious Magic Johnson parallels, the Lamar Odom comps and the idea that he's an extension of the LeBronification of today's stars. Simmons can be any of these players if you want him to be, but it takes away from whom we can imagine him becoming.

The Cairo Environment Summit in the summer is meant to allow everybody to come to a point of agreement on what to do but the ageing political powerhouses seem intent only on injuring each other. The Old World wants immediately to limit activity, to reduce the human impact of over production. Their New World antagonists aren't convinced, wanting to survey the planet's resources and human activity ostensibly to identify the real causes, but really to consolidate their position before cuts happen.
