"It's not the greatest view. One of those last minute decisions. This seat was open, and I figured it was also cheap," he said. Three minutes later, the mood darkened instantaneously. Andre Roberson sprinted in along the baseline from the corner, like he's done hundreds of times before, and as he leapt off his left leg to sky for a Russell Westbrook backdoor alley oop lob, something went wrong. In mid air Roberson stopped, went horizontal and landed hard, flat on his back. As Thunder teammates gathered around him, the Thunder medical staff took Roberson off in a stretcher, stabilizing his left leg.
