Realizing that he had no hope of putting together a viable product in Boston, Baldwin opted to merge with the WFL's as yet unnamed New York franchise on January 26, 1974. That team was owned by Whalers and Boston Celtics majority owner Bob Schmertz and three of his New York based limited business partners; Henry Fujawski, John Lander and Steven Cohen who together made up the core of the Stars ownership and like Baldwin hadn't had to pay a franchise fee. The two teams had already worked together very closely in the draft.

To fully ensure the safety of an athlete, proper concussion tests are vital for identifying, treating, and preventing future concussions. In the past, before athletic trainers or concussion tests, coaches would simply ask the athlete if they felt alright and if the athlete said they felt fine the coach would put him or her back into the game. When conducting a concussion test athletic trainers have three different tests they can conduct; the Standard Assessment of Concussions, The Immediate Post concussion Assessment and Cognitive Test, and the baseline..
