By the time Chyna was 22, her skills and signature look (pierced dimples, long blonde wig with the blunt bang, huge derriere) had left an impression on the hip hop community. In fact, this twisted web of Lip Kits, step cousin half siblings, and deceit may never have come to pass if Drake (yes, Drake) hadn't dropped Blac Chyna into pop culture without her permission when he rapped "Call up King of Diamonds and tell Chyna it'd be worth the flight" on his 2010 debut album Thank Me Later. In addition to the infamous Drake shout out which she claimed to be shocked about when her manager emailed her the song she appeared in her soon to be brother in law Kanye West's "Monster" video as Nicki Minaj's stunt double in a scene where Nicki ties herself to a chair.
