So I just read that Borland did receive a bachelors while at Wisconsin but he interested in going back for a Master in Sports Management, possibly to go into coaching. Maybe it just me but for him to take this stance, really, on the sport as a whole, then to pursue another way to ultimately profit off it (while other young men put themselves at risk) seems a little hypocritical. If he feels this sport is too dangerous for himself to play, then how could he even consider being an individual that will advocate for others to marcus williams jersey play it.
