While the Eagles and Packers still have to take the field Monday, every division except for the NFC West is realistically up for grabs heading into the stretch run. The AFC North, AFC South, AFC West, NFC North and NFC South all feature at least two teams within a game of each other at the top. What's more, the New York Giants are two games behind the Dallas Cowboys in the NFC East with a head to head game remaining, while the Miami Dolphins are in the same situation chasing the New England Patriots in the AFC East. That means there will be plenty on the line in Week 13, and bettors will have a number of crucial games to choose from in Las Vegas. With that in mind, here is a look at the odds and predictions for every contest in Week 13. However, the contest between the Miami Dolphins and Baltimore Ravens gets the nod as the game of the week because of its direct impact on the AFC wild card race and the combined hot streaks from the two teams. Baltimore comes into this clash with wins in three of its last four games, all of which were division victories over the Steelers, Cincinnati Bengals and Cleveland Browns.

"I love the foundation we're building," Juszczyk told me. "It started in free agency. Then what we did in the draft. You are confused on what class_weight does. Changing the class weight increase the weights for data points in the less represented classes (/ decreasing for the over represented class) so that the "weight" of each class is equal as if they had the same number of positive and negative examples. This is a common trick for trying to avoid a classifier that always votes for the most common class.
