Westbrook finished the first and third quarters, while George started the second and fourth. Their offensive leadership helped carry the Thunder throughout, but it was the defensive pressure the entire team generated that allowed the Thunder to attempt 13 more field goals than the Warriors. George was the catalyst, leading the Thunder to 14 steals and 25 forced turnovers, which led to 38 Thunder points. Golden State shot just 8 for 28 from the three point line, so between the runouts the Oklahoma City got off Warriors misses and giveaways, a path to the paint was opened wide, and the Thunder carved it for 54 points.

English was the 23rd pick by the Bucks in 1976 trying to rebuild after trading Kareem Abdul Jabbar. He was one of the great early era free agents, moving to the Pacers and then being traded to Denver for George McGinnis. English, one of the best ever mid range shooters, then went on to a Hall of Fame career with eight All Star appearances and leading the NBA in scoring in 1983.
