Concussions, a type of traumatic brain injury, are a frequent concern for those playing sports, from children and teenagers to professional athletes. Repeated concussions are a known cause of various neurological disorders, most notably chronic traumatic encephalopathy (CTE), which in professional athletes has led to premature retirement,[1] erratic behavior and even suicide. Because concussions cannot be seen on X rays or CT scans, attempts to prevent concussions have been difficult.[2].

And in the bigger scheme of things in terms of building fans for the future, what do you want your kids to play? I mean, of all the sports out there, do you want to go to a baseball game, or do want to watch your kid play basketball? Do you want to worry about him a whole football game, or do you want to watch your kid play basketball? [Editor note: Yes, because serious injuries never happen in basketball.] Do you want him to get healthy from running the court, or do you want to watch him play football and worry about collisions? believes that the NBA benefits from the fact that people know who who the players are. [Julian] Edelman? In baseball, of the 25 players, you might know two or three. Kids play 2K, watch a game, watch TV; you know every player. That's a huge advantage because our players have brands.
