But a bigger reason was that this was to make up for 1964 when Oregon State was voted in ahead of USC. The coach of Oregon State in 1964 was Prothro.[9][28] Another speculation was the vote was against UCLA out of pure jealousy by the rest of the conference, which voted 7 1 for the clearly inferior team. Morgan called it a "gross injustice" and the "a dark day in UCLA and AAWU Athletic history." Inflamed UCLA students who had gathered for the Rose Bowl celebration rally, took to the streets of Westwood in protest and actually blocked the 405 Freeway for a short time.[9] Ironically, Morgan was the force behind establishing a tie breaking method adopted by the conference one year later in which only loss column counted; the first tiebreaker was head to head results, followed by overall record.
