a scholarship prior to the season. In his first season, he played tailback and special teams and returned kicks.[5]Prior to his senior season, Taylor asked to be moved to cornerback.[6] He started the season at the right cornerback spot and recorded 46 tackles, eight passes defensed and two forced fumbles. In four games, he did not allow an opponent to catch a ball.[5] Among his college teammates was Charles Tillman who was drafted by the Chicago Bears.[3]Despite his inexperience and lack of consistent play in college,[3] the Pittsburgh Steelers selected Taylor in the fourth round (125th overall) in the 2003 NFL Draft.[7] The selection was made based primarily on Taylor's rare combination of size and speed leading up to the draft, he was timed allegedly as fast as 4.18 seconds in the 40 yard dash.[8] However, most NFL coaches and general managers still failed to see his potential.[4][6]In his first two years in the league, Taylor was used primarily on special teams, though he saw spot duty at defensive back.[5] In his third season (2005) Taylor moved into the starting lineup at left cornerback.
