According to a study done by Daniel Oppenheimer a professor of psychology and marketing at Anderson School of Management at UCLA student athletes feel that their teammates do not care about academics as much as them so they are pushed by mob mentality to study less. Oppenheimer's study revealed, "When asked to assess how much their teammates cared about athletics, the athletes were close, guessing 8.8. However, when asked to evaluate how much their teammates cared about academics, those same athletes guessed only 7.8 far below the 9+ average." According to this study student athletes think that their teammates take school as a joke and try to breeze through it.
