But Rivera is not the greatest player in baseball history. There have been significantly better players than Rivera who have not gotten in unanimously. By my best guess, there should have been 20 unanimous Hall of Famers already. But the Canadiens could do nothing but watch the game be decided by two players who are largely responsible for keeping the Islanders in the race this season and who have combined for 101 points this season. They were a disallowed goal from winning it outright in regulation, but the right call on an offside challenge made that moot. Greiss did just enough to make Tavares and Barzal's contributions count.
