The offense as a whole just stinks. Receivers when they even got open dropped easy passes. Not that it matters because Dalton was terrible. Finally, what happens when a ref is 90% certain of what they saw, yet allows to let it play out just in case, and replay is not conclusive enough to undo a decision based totally on slight uncertainty? It doesn seem right that a play where an official didn kill the play, despite that he thought it was over, would end up upheld due to imperfect camera angle. Yet, that would be the unintended consequence of it play out should be killed unless ref has significant uncertainty as to what he saw. If he believes he saw it right then he should kill the play, as was the case with the Jack fumble..

In league meetings prior to the 1933 season, three new teams, the Pirates, the Cincinnati Reds and the Eagles, were admitted to the NFL.[7][8] Ten teams were then in the NFL and, at George Preston Marshall's urging, with Halas' support, NFL was reorganized into an Eastern Division and a Western Division. In the Eastern Division were the Philadelphia Eagles, Brooklyn Dodgers, New York Giants, Boston Redskins, and the Pittsburgh Pirates. In the Western Division were the Chicago Bears, Portsmouth Spartans, Chicago Cardinals, Green Bay Packers, and the Cincinnati Reds.
