High school sports should be a fun way to physically express yourself as an athlete, but at the same time learn some of life's lessons, like sportsmanship, discipline, and respect. In today's society, winning comes before everything, but if winning requires neglect of good sportsmanship, then nothing is gained in the long run. Sportsmanship matters not only in sports, but also in the rest of our everyday lives.

More to the point: No one seems to be mentioning that the Raiders ownership may not be able to afford to make the Los Angeles move. Relative to some other owners and that the key here, not that Mark Davis has a far greater net worth than anyone commenting on this board this group does not appear to be particularly well capitalized. I could be wrong about Davis partners, but his wealth is entirely tied up in the team itself.
