Since the company didn't yet have public stock to hand out, Brown would instead solicit loans and, in some cases, promise high interest payments in return. To people like Tommy and Linda Tharp an elderly couple who had built a retirement nest egg on the success of a small telephone installation business, and who had been introduced to Brown when he was a stockbroker it seemed like a perfect situation. They agreed to hand Brown $100,000 out of their retirement savings.
