Before the invention of the football helmet, players would often grow their hair long, because they believed it would protect their heads. [4] The man largely credited with inventing the first helmet was George Barclay.[2] In 1896 he designed a headgear which soon became known as a "head harness". It had three thick leather straps forming a close fit around his head, made by a harness maker.

After the game, Pierce, clad in a green plaid blazer, entered the court via the newly craig watts jersey named Paul Pierce Players' Tunnel. The team said the tunnel, featuring Pierce's signature, will serve as a reminder to current and future players of what "being a Celtic" means.
