The use of terms and images referring to Native Americans/First Nations as the name or mascot for a sports team is a topic of public controversy in the United States and Canada. Since the 1960s, as part of the indigenous civil rights movements, there have been a number of protests and other actions by Native Americans and their supporters targeting the more prominent use of such names and images by professional franchises such as the Cleveland Indians (in particular their "Chief Wahoo" logo); and the Washington Redskins (the term "redskins" being defined in most American English dictionaries as 'derogatory slang'). In 2017, a year marked by numerous professional sports player protests against racism during the National Anthem, commentators asked why the stereotyping of Native Americans still continued, including the decision to have the Washington Redskins host a game on Thanksgiving.[1] Change is seen locally in the trend of school and college teams retiring Native American names and mascots since the 1970s.
