Hindi Chinese For the last 18 years, the Sacramento Kings have been defined by a royal purple, black and silver identity, featuring a multifaceted logo claude pelon jersey comprised of two elongated lances behind a centered crown and basketball base. But during the revolutionary brand change in the mid 1990s, in which the Kings replaced the familiar blue and red color scheme that had been a franchise staple since 1971, the team nearly opted for a burgundy, gold and black palate. In fact, Tom O'Grady, who was hired by Commissioner David demario davis jersey Stern as the NBA's first Creative Director in 1990 and orchestrated the creation of 20 of the 30 NBA teams' re branding initiatives, reveals he and Michael McCullough, the Kings then Vice President of Marketing, faced an arduous back and forth process in which the team rigorously sampled both purple and burgundy merchandise. "The Sacramento Kings were very close to having the curtis martin jersey (current) Cleveland Cavaliers colors of burgundy, gold and black," says O'Grady. "It was a toss up for the team right until the end."In addition to facing an immediate problem with color sourcing the NBA's former clothing manufacturers, Starter and Champion, sent cardinal and maroon samples instead of burgundy the fact the local San Francisco 49ers already had similar colors ultimately swayed the team towards purple. "The 49ers darkened their color scheme at the time, and I think (the Kings) felt, although it was a really cool color palate, it was going to be too much (like) the 49ers," says O'Grady.
