The FA argues it goes further than the Wada code, testing for social and recreational drugs such as cannabis and cocaine "out of competition", rather than solely around match or tournament time. Last season, the FA's figures show that 1,278 tests were carried out at all levels of professional football, and FA policy is to test the Premier League more than any other. There were just four adverse findings, a tiny proportion, similar to the level of breaches found every year since 2007 08..
