When Joe Montana took the snap, the play, known as Sprint Right Option, was intended to be a pick play to set up a quick pass to wide receiver Freddie Solomon; earlier in the game, Solomon had scored a touchdown on that play.[3] However, Solomon slipped while running his route, thus ruining the timing of the play (as Clark was no longer in position to set the pick). As such, the Cowboys were able to cover Solomon perfectly. Making matters worse, the pass rush of the Cowboys collapsed the 49ers' offensive line.
